As part of Oxford Brookes University's 150th anniversary, and as a way of showing our appreciation to all participants, clinicians, researchers, members of the public and organisations that have supported our work, we will be holding a Centre for Rehabilitation Open Day and everyone is welcome!

Over the past decade researchers from the Centre for Rehabilitation at Oxford Brookes University have investigated a variety of topics related to rehabilitation and physical activity. Topics include measuring and understanding movement in those with movement difficulties, exercising benefits in people with neurological conditions and developing new rehabilitation methods.

Our Open Day activities will include:

- “Have a go” on several sporting activities (in association with Oxford Sport Partnership)
- Talks by members of the Centre's Movement Science Group about the results of their studies
- Workshops on the insights and technology generated by the research
- Various accessible activities based on some of our research tools and experimental set-ups

This event is free and open to everyone.
